

There are consistent times that we need to reboot and make adjustments so that we can hit our desired target

Time for a Reboot

I remember hearing the story of a space craft being launched to the moon. After the initial launch things looked good as the moon was clearly the primary target. However if there were no subsequent course corrections after the initial engine turbo thrust then the space craft would end up missing the moon entirely. In like manner in our own lives we need consistent little (and sometimes big) adjustments to assure that we will make our objective of growing in the First Commandment.

I have received some feedback over the years questioning my consistent forays to seek YHWH in concerted ways throughout the calendar cycle. Folks have told me, "I thought we had a media fast, and a time to consecrate ourselves and seek the LORD a few months ago. Why are we doing it again?" or "Didn't we do this same thing last year." I used to follow this line of thinking and would wonder why I was having another time to seek Him. Didn't it take last time? Why so many fits and starts to my life and so why launch out again in another consecrated time.

But, I no longer think that way. I know that I am prone to wander and drift significantly, and I need consistent times throughout the years to make course corrections to once again refocus myself so that I am once again on target to "hit the moon." Tomorrow I will talk about another opportunity for three weeks in January to readjust and reboot. I've seen that over the course of these past times of readjustment that helpful shifts are made in my life and in the community that have staying power. I'm praying that this will once more be a time to seek the LORD and make needed adjustments. I know that I once again need this time and hope that there will be others who will also join in on this adventure.
